What Could Happen if we had Korean ballots?

Hubert Vo, Texas
House Rep. Dist. 149

In 2004 in Houston, Texas, Vietnamese Americans were successful in getting translated ballots after years of advocating for them and showing there were more than 10,000 Vietnamese American voters who would benefit. The result? Hubert Vo became the first Vietnamese American ever elected in Texas.

The majority of Koreans (56%) – like Vietnamese – feel more comfortable reading and speaking in their home language. This makes sense when we think of how many of us immigrate to America as adults and don't have the benefit of a U.S. education. But the right to vote, which is a right every U.S. Citizen has, is not tied to your English language ability. You have the same power to raise your voice as any other, but as a community we should fight like the Vietnamese in Houston to make voting accessible for all Koreans, especially our grandparents and others who need Korean language assistance. For that reason alone, we should vote November 4th!
